
Config Drive

The configuration drive is used to store instance-specific metadata and is presented to the instance as a disk partition label using a unique name. The configuration drive is used to expose a networking configuration when you do not use DHCP to assign IP addresses to instances.

